

Why I want to go to college

The value of education is a treasure that is easy to let go of and that's where some people are mistaken. Education should be held on to for the sake of one's future and career. I want to go to college so I can have a good education, have strong knowledge, and get a good job.

Someday, I hope to get a degree in the medical field and become an anesthesiologist. This job could be attainable to me if I acquire a good education and succeed through all years of school. School provides me a free education throughout elementary all the way up to highschool that will prepare me for college, which will get me a college degree that I need to become an anesthesiologist. Becoming an anesthesiologist is my goal for the future and this goal will be achievable through a college education.

Another reason I think education is valuable is just being smart and educated in general. These things don't just come naturally to people. They are taught to us through school. Everyday of my life until I retire, I will use these things I have learned to do everyday tasks. Some of these tasks I could mention are making purchases, doing chores, running a bank account, and too many more. Not only can I use this education for these things, but also use it to make smart decisions.

My third reason why I want to go to college is the opportunities and skills it can provide. Going to college can bring many opportunities such as networking, developing new skills and techniques, having a career, earning money, and plenty more. Not only can college bring these things, but also things such as learning to be independent. Some kids are used to growing up with their parents doing the dishes and laundry while they are playing games or on their phones. When you go to college, you can't just rely on your roommate to do all the chores around the place, you should help too. Being independent doesn't only have to do with college though, it's also used when you're older and living alone or if you become a parent yourself.

My last reason why I want to go to college is to learn my different interests. For my first year of college, I might choose to take classes for being an anesthesiologist but then decide that job isn't for me. There are many different paths that can be taken in college, and I could easily change my mind on what job I want while I'm still in college. I might not change my mind, but I might find other hobbies or things I would like to do in my freetime.

To summarize my essay on why I want to go to college and why I think education is very valuable, I want to go to college for the benefits of making good and smart decisions, opportunities and skills, and finding new interests. There are so many benefits of going to college, and never once have I thought about not going to college. I hope to earn a good education and get scholarships to get into a good college. I want to graduate college advancing towards the medical field and hopefully become an anesthesiologist.
